

Intelligence

The Acme of Skill

Boston University

745 Commonwealth Avenue
Boston, Massachusetts 02215

The University Professors

September 21, 1979

Admiral Stansfield Turner
Director
Central Intelligence Agency
McLean, Virginia 22101

Dear Stan:

Despite all the problems you are having, I can attest that the CIA's name is still good. You will be interested in a little incident that happened to me the other day.

I have been giving a series of weekly evening lectures here at Boston University on various Middle East subjects. Last week a young eleven year old grade school student, [redacted] called the office to ask if he might attend. His father brought him to the last lecture, on Egyptian/American Relations. During the discussion period at the end of the lecture, I was surprised and pleased that this little eleven year old got up to ask a question. It was a surprisingly good one, about Soviet reaction to Egyptian involvement in the Yemeni Civil War.

Yesterday, young [redacted] telephoned again, to ask what the subject of the next lecture will be, and indicated his hope that his father will again bring him. I asked him what prompted his interest in the Middle East. He replied that he had decided to become a "CIA intelligence analyst" and was preparing himself for this. He was reading up on Far Eastern, Middle Eastern and African matters. He wanted to know if I had ever gotten information from the CIA. I told him that I had, and mentioned the various sources of information available to an ambassador. I encouraged him in his objective. He then told me that what I had said was very interesting, and that when he retired from being a CIA intelligence analyst he would consider becoming an ambassador.

So you can see, you are one up on me. He already wants to become a "CIA intelligence analyst." He's only willing to consider becoming an ambassador after he retires from the CIA!

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Hermann Frederick Eilts

HFE/en